At the entrance to the quarry The large circular platform hoist, an ingenious piece of elevating equipment, transfers the marble blocks from the place of extraction for transport

Carl Weiskopf
the founder of the quarry

They come from Lasa!
The lion sculptures in front of the Feldherrnhalle in Munich are made of Lasa marble

At the railway station of Lasa 800 metres lower The Lasa marble works, despite their short existence, have already become for those concerned a striking expression of the outstanding engineering activities of German technology and German enterprise, and at the same time are a visible symbol of German-Italian partnership in the working sphere.

Right: The marble saw cuts enormous blocks, weighing up to 8000 tonnes, which are hewn by the most up-to-date cable sawing methods
